Often the bribe takers justify their practice, saying it is “need” driven, but over time it becomes “greed” driven. Thus the money involved in large corruptions becomes far larger than the money involved in corruption at all lower levels put together. However the damage done to the Nation by the day-to-day petty corruption faced by the common man is far greater, as it corrodes the moral fiber of the society.

Therefore, if we as responsible citizens are ready to combat petty corruptions, large corruptions will automatically vanish, as small drops will make the river flow and wash all dirt. RTI Act is the magic wand in our hands that empowers us to achieve this. Let us wield it wherever necessary and ward off corruption in society.

Let us sow the seeds of discipline in young minds so that when the batons change hands, they live in a clean and honest India.

Jai Hind!
